Toward game time the sky became overcast with thunderclouds that gave a threat of showers. The weather was hot and sticky. The ball players, however, found the day to their liking, especially the outfielders, who had often in Saturday's game lost the ball in the glare of the sun that today was hidden behind screening clouds.

The crowd came late to the game, and there were early estimates that more than

Both Teams Practice Batting.

The Boston Red Sox put in some stiff batting practice, with the left-hander, Pennock, on the mound. Afterward Carrigan tested the batting sights of his players on the offerings of Wyckoff, a right-hander. As it grew darker with the gathering clouds the managers of the two clubs began to look over their speed ball pitchers.
